Downtown Harvest, an eclectic foursome with cool beats and a vibrant sound wins our Do You Rock contest

Downtown Harvest, born in the winter of 2002, is an eclectic blend of melodic groove rock, pop, hip-hop, and dance. After relocating to Los Angeles in 2005 to refine their sound and make original and creative transformations in their music, they recorded a 12-song debut LP. With three lead singers, big beats, and versatile song writing the band often leaves their listeners guessing what will come next. Using various keyboards, saxophone, electric bass, drums, drum machines, and guitars, Downtown Harvest has created a multidimensional sound that taps into many genres, both classic and contemporary. Their music has personality with catchy hooks, head-bopping grooves, and a little sense of humor. The group references Jimi Hendrix as much as C&C Music Factory as the framework for their sound. They bring explosive and contagious energy to their live show, wowing their audiences time and time again.

LARRY THOMAS MOORE vocals, guitar, bass
CHRISTOPHER C. WOOD vocals, drums, drum machine
